the three men who captured them talking outside seems strange, but one theory is that they did hear them and assumed they were no one interested in the store or likely to loiter long outside, and that they might merely be passing by.

The men now held prisoners got into the store, through a window at the rear. They helped themselves to smokes and such other things as they wanted out of a general stock of groceries and meats before tackling the safe.

Hyan and Burke are real old-timers. That they are not at their best in their lilegal calling, is indicated by the manner in which they fell down on Sunday morning's job. They will be arraigned in the town court this morning and very probably bound over at once for trial at the superjor court. In the meanting their real identity, and police records may help to do this.
